COLUMBUS' FLEET.

Recent Investigation Concerning the Discoverer's Ships.

ing Particulars of the Great er's Equipment Gleaned from scient Documents Found

Europe and America vie with each other at the present time in presenting to the world interesting facts, gleaned from researches in connection with Christopher Columbus and the discovery of this country, the commemoration of which is soon to be celebrated. The Austrian Maritime Review has recently published a very interesting illustrated article, the result of investigations that have been made, particularly in Spain, in order to ascertain beyond doubt the exact type and maritime value of the three ships that brought the great explorer to the boundaries of a new continent. These ships, as we already know, were called "caravelles," but only the latest researches have gained for us the knowledge that this name did not apply to any particular class of vessel.

The Spaniards used the word "Cara-beia," which they borrowed from the Franconian tongue, and which has its root in the Greek word "Karati," to designate ships that bore not the slightest resemblance to each other, either in construction or capacity.

The investigators gathered all possible proofs that could be furnished either by the admiral's diary, particu-larly the log book, and the sketches which Columbus published through Juan de la Cosa, his pilot, besides many ancient documents pertaining to this subject. This thoroughness on the part of the investigators has enabled them to furnish to the marine painter Rafael Manleon the means for executing an aquarell, representing the fleet of Columbus.

The three vessels were the Santa dimensions of the Santa Maria were as follows: Length of keel, fifty-eight feet; between perpendiculars, seventy feet; displacement of tonnage, from County division has been freely dis-cussed by a great many people, during dred and thirty. with a small one in the bow. The seaworthiness of the Santa Maria was excellent. The admiral's diary speaks thus of it: "The vessel behaved splendidly in b.d weather; it traveled with the swiftness of a good flyer." It was the same with the other ships, and the log records often fifteen Italian miles an hour, which is equal to eleven nautical miles, a speed that was
